

Thomas Hanke is Professor of Business Administration and Logistics at FOM University of Applied Sciences. He is the academic director of the FOM Institute for Logistics and Service Management. Previously, he worked as a lecturer and researcher for several academic institutes and was responsible for a number of international R&D projects. In many years of management experience in various business functions, Thomas also demonstrated his practical skills in banking, management & technology consulting, in managing a startup incubator, and in running his own consulting company. He holds an M.A. in Communication Science and a Dr. rer. pol. (Ph.D. equivalent) in Business Information Systems.